A HOME MARKET.

This is one of the favorite phrass of the whigh protectionists. They repeat it, as though there was a magic in the words—something more than appears on their face. If we have any correct sense of what these theorists mean, it is this—they have a vague idea that if a protective tariff was passed it would necessarily probibit foreign goods from coming into this country, and as effectually prohibit us from sending abroad our surplus wheat, flour, corn, and provisions is because if the people of the old countries could not send us goods to pay us for our breadstuffs and provisionis, they could not buy at all, as they have no money. So they want to keep our surplus produce at home.—Yours.

PLEM GROVE, Sept. 3, 1850.

Dr. S. M. men as will carry their principles and measures into effect."

The position Mr. Pierce has ever occupied, in Congress of any other public station, in reference to questions vital to wheetern prosperity, has been antagonistical to those which were advocated and idealy cherished by those eminent statesmen whose election to the Presidency I most heartily and cordially advocated. They raught and I have always believed, that the constitution vests in Congress the power to open and repair harbors and remove obstructions from nuvigable rivers; and that it was expedient that Congress should exercise such power whenever such improvements are necessary for the common defense—for the protection and facility of commerce with foreign nations or among the States—said improvements being national and general in their character. I understand Mr. Pierce to superadd to the above doctrine, a provise to the effect that the waters on which these improvements are proposed to be made, shall be sait, and they shall be moved by itdes. He has, in effect, declared that the depth of waters to be improved, nor their capacity for trade among the States, forms no criterion for a just demand upon federal protection. His political history, as collected from his action in Congress no less than from his letter to the Committee of the Convention, accepting bis nomination to the Presidency in the terms set forth in the platform, furnish evidence of his hostility to all the prominent measures which tend to western prosperity—of which internal improvements and done-tie industry are the most important.

As a Western man, therefore, and as an original provenient, and to the protection and encouncement of American Industry. I cannot and will not support such a man as Franklin Pierce, one of whom will necessarily be elected the next Fresident. I had not support such a man as Franklin Pierce, one of whom will necessarily be cleened the two, and convenient and promotion of American industry, ought to puster and to ordially support.

The caloric ship "Ericson" is now complete, with the exception of the engine and joiner work, and will go off the stocks the latter part of next week, and will go on her trial trip about the first of November. Her completion is looked floward to with gran interest, but her builders are sanguine of success. She will consume only about eight tons of coal per day, and, if expectations are realized, can be sent on a voyage of nine thousand miles—from Panama to Australia—if desired, taking off coal for both the outward and return trips. She measures two thousand four hundred tons.
